

MORNING APPEAL.

Tuesday July 3, 1888.

FOR PRESIDENT,
BENJAMIN HARRISON
OF INDIANA.
FOR VICE PRESIDENT,
LEVI P. MORTON
OF NEW YORK.

THE RIP VAN WINKLE PARTY.

About a quarter of a century ago the Democratic party went out of power. Less than four years ago a business man who had no business to obtrude his senseless jaw into politics, made an utterance which lost New York to the Republicans, and the Democracy again assumed control of the Government.

During the season when the Democracy was out of power the country made some tremendous advances in population and commercial growth.

It had spread beyond the Missouri river.

It had rolled millions of population over the broad Empire of the West.

It had laced the public domain with railroads and telegraph lines, and dotted the "American desert" with flourishing towns.

The old, slow-going steamboats had even way to the locomotive, and the pine torch was supplanted with the electric light.

Every department of the Government had doubled, and in many cases thrubled the boundaries of its jurisdiction and its duties.

The old things had passed away, and what might be termed a new civilization had dawned.

But leaders of the Democracy had made no note of these changes in their own country.

This is why the Postmaster General is anxious to run his Department on the same appropriation that the last Democratic Postmaster ran it.

This is why the Secretary of the Treasury is anxious to have the old starvation wages paid Government employees.

They want to run the country as it was run "befo' the war." It can't be done. The United States is no longer a corner grocery on the X roads; it is a big wholesale house, and it must be run on a bigger scale than it was run "befo' the war."

We should not now be engaged in scrimping and saving and economizing to make both ends meet. We have a big establishment. Protection to our industries has made us wealthy and prosperous, and we can afford to run our business on a big scale and show the nations of the earth that we can live like gentlemen and Christians.

A POLITICAL PRECEDENT.

In 1840 General Harrison, the grandfather of the present Republican nominee, carried the State of New York against Van Buren. He also carried Indiana. The four doubtful States in the East where the battle is to be fought are Connecticut, Indiana, New Jersey and New York. These cast sixty-six electoral votes. If the Republican candidate carries New York, as his ancestor carried it, he will almost certainly be elected, even if Indiana should be lost.

In the canvass of 1840 the Whigs had the advantage of a candidate against whom no personal objections could be urged. There were some sneers about his border life. These were turned to the best account in the log cabins which appeared everywhere. Greeley's campaign paper called the Log Cabin had an immense circulation. The candidate was absolutely invulnerable. He had fought for his country, and his record was a good one in every particular.

The candidate presented in the grandson has also the immense advantage of high personal character. In this respect he is invulnerable. He has also the record of battles fought for his country. The battle of Tippecanoe and the other military services rendered by the elder Har-ison, important as they were at that time, were events of far less magnitude than the series of hard-fought battles in which the younger Harrison was engaged. Van Buren of New York had been President one term. The border candidate, living nearly a thousand miles further west, defeated him. The present incumbent, elected from New York, has held office one term. Another Harrison is on his political track. The Ohio-born man from Indiana starts out as a very formidable candidate.—Bulletin.

BEARING FRUIT.

The iron manufacturers of Pennsylvania in view of the present tariff tinkering now going on in Congress have notified their workmen of a reduction of wages or else the closing down of their vast works.

This affects about 100,000 metal workers.

If the proposed reduction on iron fails to pass these vast manufacturing will soon be in full blast at the old scale of wages.

Should the Free-traders win in November these mills will never reopen as all the iron will be imported from England.

The railroad companies will get cheaper rates, but over 100,000 people will be thrown out of employment to swell the glutted ranks of crime and pauperism in the East.
